Excerpt: It's a well-known fact that millions of workers in several industries are negatively affected by the use of toxic solvents. Trouble is, they're still being used in today's modern workplace, and even with strict safety measures in place, these volatile chemicals continue to pose a dangerous health threat to workers and therefore, can significantly impact a company's bottom line.

Greetings!

How has your summer been? It goes by too fast, doesn't it? My wife and I have really enjoyed it. We've done a few road trips to see family and have also had some down time at home, so it has all been good!

In September, I'll be making my way once again to the Green Expo trade show in Mexico, September 25-27. Each year, I meet more and more interesting people doing some of the most amazing things when it comes to going green. Great insights, camaraderie, and of course networking.

I'll also be looking for distributors, so pass the word along if you can! And if you're going, let me know and maybe we could have a quick cuppa java and a chat.

All best!

John

Salvage and Bioremediation

The August edition of Pacific Maritime Magazine has an interesting article about salvage, in particular, a mention about how bioremediation is now becoming an expected part of salvage job contracts, as explained by Patrick Keenan, Director of Operations for Titan Salvage.

It's great to see support for bioremediation from a major salvage operator! You may already know Titan also has the distinction of working on the Costa Concordia wreck.

In an excerpt from Picking Up the Pieces, Keenan says, "The environmental aspect of salvage has really ballast tanks."

 Jeff Phelps
 Vessel Manager,
 Maersk Line Ltd.

On Spillaway and Fleet Kleen:

"One of the best advantages aside from its ability to clean the deepest crevices and cracks on any surface is the added benefit of cost savings and time."

Greg Cox
 PSA & Environmental Coordinator for Delta Airlines

Solvent Alert

The Centres for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) has issued a new health alert from the Occupational Safety & Health Administration (OSHA) and NIOSH the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) about 1-Bromopropane.

Like many other hazardous solvents still being used in the workplace, 1-Bromopropane can cause neurological disorders. In fact, they're saying, based on studies with animals, that it could also cause cancer.

Another reminder that the use of personal protective equipment is extremely critical in helping prevent any health problems. And why eco-friendly industrial cleaning products are a much safer solution.
